

CONTROL METHOD FOR MOVING RACKS

Abstract

Several embodiments of moveable partitioning systems wherein the relative positions of the partitions are controlled by non-contact sensors and various control systems therefore that permit controlled movement between the partitions to maintain either close spacing thereof or the establishment of predetermined width aisles between them. In addition the control system insures parallel movement of the partitions even if they are supported on a surface without tracks.